

Generalized Nash games: A vector optimization approach

John Cotrina

Universidad del Pacifico

A generalized Nash game corresponds to a non-cooperative interaction between a finite set of players in which the objective function and the feasible set of each player depend on the decisions of the others. We present a new existence result by reformulating the generalized game as a vector optimization problem.

In Special Session 21 on Optimization and Control at the Mathematical Congress of the Americas 2025.